ON AN EARTHLY HEBE.

"Fair as a star, when only one
Is shining in the sky!"

"FULL many a flower is born, says GRAY,
"To blush unseen, tho' fair,
"And waste its fragrant sweets away
"Upon the desert air!"
If there be any classic youth
By whom this fact's denied,
He soon may prove its perfect truth
By going were I guide.

Prince RUPERT, many years ago,
Perform'd great deeds of fame,
And, hence 'tis, sev'ral cities show
Some streets that bear his name:
In London, there is one such street,
For many reasons blest,
Renown'd for boil'd and roasted meat,
Most admirably drest.

A beauty there, not nobly born,
Nor wealthy, nor allied
To nameless fops or fools forlorn,—
Shines forth in maiden pride!
With eye as clear as sunny brooks
That brightly gleam, and while
She wounds you with its cloudless looks,
She cures you with a smile!

Her's is a wide-extended sway,
For not the young alone,
But aged too, their homage pay
Before this beauty's throne!
With wish'd for meats and soups and pies
She's ever ready found,
While still her lovely, laughing eyes
Enliven all around!

The Parson here proves all are fools
Who deem a feast a sin;
The Scholar thinks no more of schools,
But turns to tucking-in;
The Lawyer leaves his boring brief,
And comes his craw to cram;
The Doctor well dissects his beef,
His fowl, or veal and ham.

Here, too, the lively sons of France
With Britain's dandies vie,
In many a fond and furtive glance,
As MARG'RET passes by,
The soft and liquid strain of love,
Their language breathes so well,
They use, and cast their looks above,
Exclaiming, "Qu'elle est belle."

Oh, Fortune! what a stupid witch
Art thou, to waste thy store
In making countless asses rich—
And leave the lovely poor;
But, gentle MARG'RET! beauty bright
Will long be thy blest prize,
Till thou art call'd to realms of light
In beauty's native skies!

And, Oh, 'tis sweet on earth to see
A form so fair as thine,
Tho' snares surround, ordained to be
Unsullied virtue's shrine!
Long may'st thou this pure gem possess,
Whatever else betide,
Thy charm,—a woman's loveliness;
Thy guard,—a woman's pride!

Oh, HARDING! great and sov'reign Lord
Of Mutton, Beef, and Veal,
Men long will crowd around thy board,
While they have hearts to feel;
For Ceres spreads her daintiest fare,
And last, but, Oh! not least,
Another charm attracts them there,—
A HEBE serves the feast!

THE SOLDIER'S WIFE.

A SKETCH.

It is now many years since the first battalion of the 17th Regiment of Foot, under orders to embark for India, that far distant land, where so many of our brave countrymen have fallen victims to the climate, and were so few have slept in what soldiers call "the bed of glory" were assembled in the barrack yard of Chatham, to be inspected previous to their passing on board the transports, which lay moored in the Downs. It was scarcely day break, when the merry drum and fife were heard over all parts of the town, and the soldiers were seen sallaying forth from their quarters, to join the ranks; with their bright firelocks on their shoulders, and the knapsacks and canteens fastened to their backs by belts as white as snow. Each soldier was accompanied by some friend or acquaintance, or by some individual, with a dearer title to his regard than either; and there was a strange and sometimes a whimsical mingling of weeping and laughter among the assembled groupes. The second battalion was to remain in England, and the greater portion of the division were present to bid farewell to their companions in arms. But among the husbands and wives, uncertainty as to their destiny prevailed,—for the lots were yet to be drawn, the lots that were to decide which of the women should accompany the regiment,—and which should remain behind. Ten of each company were to be taken, and chance was to be the only arbiter. Without noticing what passed elsewhere, I confined my attention to that company which was commanded by my friend Captain Loden, a brave and excellent officer, who, I am sure has no more than myself forgotten the scene to which I refer. The women had gathered round the flag sergeant, who held the lots in his cap; ten of them marked "to go," and all others containing the fatal words "to remain." It was a moment of dreadful suspense, and never have I seen the extreme of anxiety so powerfully depicted in the countenances of human beings as in the features of each of the soldiers' wives who composed that group. One advanced and drew her ticket; it was against her, and she retreated sobbing. Another, she succeeded; and giving a loud huzza, ran off to the distant ranks to embrace her husband. A third came forward with hesitating steps; tears were already chasing each other down her cheeks, and there was an unnatural paleness on her interesting and youthful countenance. She put her small hand into the serjeant's cap, and I saw by the rise and fall of her bosom, even more than her looks revealed. She unrolled the paper, looked upon it, and with a deep groan fell back and fainted. So intense was the anxiety of every person present, that she remained unnoticed, until all the tickets had been drawn, and the greater number of the women had left the spot. I then looked round, and beheld her supported by her husband, who was kneeling upon the ground, gazing upon her face, and drying her fast falling tears with his coarse handkerchief, and now and then pressing it to his own manly cheek.

Captain Loden advanced towards them, "I am sorry, Henry Jenkins," said he, "that fate has been against you, but bear up, and be stout-hearted." "I am so Captain," said the soldier, as he looked up and passed his rough hand across his face; "but 'tis a hard thing to part from a wife, and she so soon to be a mother." "Oh Captain!" sobbed the young woman, "as you are both a husband and a father, do not take him from me! I have no friend in the wide world but one, and you will let him bide with me. Oh take me with him! take me with him, for the love of God take me with him, Captain!" She fell on her knees, laid hold of the officer's sash, clasped it firmly between her hands, and looked up in his face, exclaiming, "Oh! leave me my only hope, at least till God has given me another;" and repeated in heart rending accents, "Oh take me with him! take me with him!" The gallant officer was himself in tears, he knew that it was impossible to grant the poor wife's petition without creating much discontent in his company, and he gazed upon them with that feeling with which a good man always regards the sufferings he cannot alleviate. At this a smart young soldier stepped forward and stood before the Captain with his hand to his cap.—"And what do you want, my good fellow?" said the officer. "My name's John Carty, plase yer honour, and I belong to the second battalion." "And what do you want here?" "Only yer honour," said Carty, scratching his head, "that poor man and his wife there are sorrow-hearted at parting, I'm thinking." "Well, and what then?" "Why yer honour, they say I'm a likely lad, and I know I'm fit for service, and if yer honour would only let that poor fellow take my place in Captain Bond's company, and let me take his place in yours, why yer honour would make two poor things happy, and save the life of one of 'em, I'm thinking." Capt. Loden considered for a few minutes, directing the young Irishman to remain where he was, proceeded to his brother officer's quarters. He soon made arrangements for the exchange of the soldiers, and returned to the place where he had left them. "Well John Carty," said he, "you go to Bengal with me; and you Henry Jenkins, remain at home with your wife." "Thank yer honour," said John Carty, again touching his cap as he walked off.

Henry Jenkins and his wife both rose from the ground and rushed into each other's arms "God bless you, Captain!" said the soldier, as he pressed his wife closer to his bosom. "Oh bless him forever!" said the wife; "bless him with prosperity and a happy heart! bless his wife, and bless his children;" and she again fainted. The officer, wiping a tear from his eye, and exclaiming, "May you never want a friend when I am far from you; you my good lad, and your amiable and loving wife!" passed on to his company, while the happy couple went in search of John Carty. * * * * * * * * *

About twelve months since as two boys were watching the sheep confined to their charge, upon a wide heath in the county of Somerset, their attention was attracted by a soldier, who walked along apparently with much fatigue, and at length stopped to rest his wearied limbs beside the old finger-post, which at one time pointed out the way to the neighbouring villages but which afforded no information to the traveller; for age had rendered it useless. The boys were gazing upon him with much curiosity, when he beckoned them towards him and enquired the way to the village of Eldenby. The eldest, a fine intelligent lad of about twelve years of age, pointed to the path and asked if he were going to any particular house in that village. "No my little lad," said the soldier, "but it is on the high-road to Frome, and I have friends there; but in truth I am very wearied, and perhaps may find in yon village some person who will befriend a poor fellow, and look to God for a reward." "Sir," said the boy, "my father was a soldier many years ago, and he dearly loves to look upon a red coat; if you come with me you may be sure of a welcome." And you can tell us stories about foreign parts," said the younger a fine chubby cheeked fellow, who, with his watch-coat thrown carelessly over his shoulders, and his crook in his right hand, had been minutely examining every portion of the soldier's dress.

The boys gave instructions to their intelligent dog, who, they said, would take good care of the sheep during their absence; and in a few minutes the soldier and his companions reached the gate of a flourishing farm-house which had all the external tokens of prosperity and happiness. The younger boy ran on a few paces before, to give his parents notice that they had invited a stranger to rest beneath their hospitable roof; and the soldier had just crossed the threshold of the door, when he was received by a joyful cry of recognition from his old friends, Henry Jenkins and his wife; and he was welcomed as a brother to the dwelling of those, who, in all human probability, were indebted to him for their present enviable station. It is unnecessary to pursue this story further than to add, that John Carty spent his furlough at Eldenby farm, and that at the expiration of it his discharge was purchased by his most grateful friends. He is now living in their happy dwelling; and his care and exertions have contributed greatly to increase their prosperity. Nothing has been wrong with them since John Carty was their steward. "Cast thy bread upon the waters," said the wise man, "and it shall be returned to thee after many days."—The Amulet.

CONCORDAT IN HOLLAND.

THE HAGUE.—As the business of the Concordat is one of some interest in England, and reports are current here that your Government means to follow the example of ours, and come to some understanding with the Pope, you will like to be told that the difficulties which have so long impeded the settlement of this perplexing matter are gradually passing away. The first legitimate Catholic Bishop, since the Concordat, has been solemnly consecrated by the Bishop of Treves, on his being appointed to the See of Namen (Namur.) Great had been the complaints, and loud the clamours of the Flemings, that they had been left so long without their spiritual fathers. For many years the Belgic Sees have been vacant, with the exception of the Primate's—the Archbishopric of Mechlen. Namen is the first in rank and extent of the Episcopal Sees, containing 334 parishes or congregations in Namur, six in Liege, and 424 in the great dukedom of Luxemburg. Doornick is next in rank, embracing 419 parishes in the province of Henegouwen. Then follows Ghent, with 296 parishes in East Flanders, 248 in West Flanders, 39 in Zeeland. Liege has 325 parishes in Liege, 315 in Lemburg, one in North Brabant, six in Namur, and 11 in Luxemburg.—There is a small independent Bishop's See, consisting of only six congregations, im Kamerjik. There are, besides these, the old Bishopric of Roermonde, whose authority takes the title of Vicar-General—a Vicar-General being attached to every See. Nineteen congregations in North Brabant are under the government of a commissary. There are two Vicariats, that of Hertogenbosch and Antwerp. In all the Northern Protestant Provinces the principal Catholic Ecclesiastical authority is called an Archpriest.—The Archpriestships are—

Of Gelderland, with	55 congregations
Holland and Zeeland	135	or 180 stations
Utrecht	56	64
Friesland	27	27
Lalland	19	22	Over-yssel and Dreuthe
Groningen	11	15
Twente	28	27	Over-yssel
Cleef	2	2

All these are the orthodox Roman Catholic assemblies; but there are three episcopal stations, which have been filled by Jansenist Bishops, whom the Pope has refused to recognise, but who, notwithstanding, are recognised by the Government of the Netherlands, are reported in all the official returns, and receive their salaries from the Government. These are the Archbishop of Utrecht and the Bishops of Haarlem and Deventer. A very active controversy concerning them had taken place a few years ago—they maintaining their sacred authority, insisting that their's was the true and orthodox Catholic faith, and quietly occupying their stations, making good their titles, and, best of all, receiving their emoluments.

From the Foreign Review.

MONTESQUIEU AND MACHIAVELLI.

The transition from Machiavelli, the theorist of barbarous policy, to Montesquieu, the theorist of legal government, includes a gigantic stride in the advancement of the species. That advancement was dearly purchased by centuries of war and civil commotion; and the elements of inextinguishable discord seemed for a time to be engendered in the bosom of each distracted country. But these were not like the fruitless contests of the feudal age, commenced in petty animosities, and perpetuating the barbarism that produced them. This was the struggle of reason against bigotry; it was religion shaking off the yoke of superstition; it was the rebellion of expanded powers and generous passions against the chains which were no longer able to control them. When the tempest had passed away, and the prospect was cleared, the European system displayed in its altered features, the beneficial results of these convulsions. The Gothic institutions had been purified; the relics of barbarism swept away; and a new and improved scene invited the contemplation, and demanded the powers of philosophical genius.

As literature exerts a powerful influence on the affairs of states, so events, in their turn, re-act on the studies of nations. During a season of general war, the science of government languished and slept amid the controversies of theology. But out of the federal combinations which the circumstances of that age produced, arose that science of international justice (the most unequivocal symptom of growing refinement) which was speedily enlarged into the science of general jurisprudence, and long occupied, almost exclusively, the mind of Europe. The discovery of certain inimitable principles from which municipal law might be deduced, was the problem which long fatigued the understandings of French and German jurists. Leaving far behind them the true principles of municipal law, cultivating it apart from the science of government, keeping separate two systems which edify and illuminate each other, the laborious publicists of Holland run riot in metaphysical confusion; and the problem still baffled the indefatigable efforts of these respectable authors. Montesquieu effected at a stroke what had wasted the lives of a thousand jurists. To him belongs the glory of having, by one of the most remarkable efforts of combination in the history of knowledge, united the several branches of civil science, and transmitted them, connected by their just relations, to posterity.

But we should offer a very inadequate view of the merits of Montesquieu, did we present him merely as the improver of philosophical jurisprudence. He enlarged the bounds of political science as distinguished from municipal law, and included within her dominion, regions which had been exploded only by desultory wanderers, and whose bearings and relations had hitherto remained unsettled. He was the first to exhibit in one comprehensive system the various elements which had been successively envolved in the progress of improvement, and which, after shattering the ancient frames of government, had subsided into those forms of civil policy which diversify the face of modern Europe. While speculative reasoners amused on ideal commonwealths, the real business of government was daily becoming more and more complicated. New affairs of state had arisen as knowledge was propogated or wealth increased. Religion and commerce, each the cause of a distinct revolution in human affairs, had exhausted and baffled all the former arts of management, and the extended field of interest and passions required a more enlarged and a more delicate system of administration.

Were we called to name the circumstance which chiefly distinguishes the writings of Montesquieu, we should mention the notion of liberty which they present. Instead of that phantom which had so long allured and mocked the nations, concealing under the guise of popular sovereignty, the features of a wild tyranny, he exhibited those substantial benefits, which are the essence of freedom, personal safety, security of property, and the authority of public opinion. Previous writers had confined their attention, for the most part, to forms of government; and conceived that in adjusting councils, and determining those institutions which pertain to the being of a civil polity, they had determined its character as a system of liberty or slavery. In the middle ages, as well as in ancient times, wherever the administration was shared among the people at large, or conducted by a considerable number of individuals, there liberty was supposed to reside. Popular rule was held to imply freedom, and acts which would have excited rebellion against a single ruler were peaceably endured as proceeding from officers who had been created by the suffrage of the multitude. Satisfied with being the source of power, the people were regardless of the mode in which it was exercised. Hence Venice and Florence enjoyed the title of free states at a time when arbitrary power was enforced, and even torture inflicted by the Council of Ten in the one, and the Priory in the other. These doctrines it required a century of varied fortunes, and of oppressions alike endured under the opposite extremes of monarchy and democracy, to explode and dissipate. That series of legislative achievements, which the tyranny of Charles II. was the means of calling forth, and which fettered the prince without subverting the throne, displayed under a monarchy a much more perfect plan of liberty than commonwealths had heretofore enjoyed. Montesquieu, we think, was the first who taught, theoretically, this lesson of stern experience; who displayed in its philosophical extent, the truth already known, practically, that the legislation, equally with the constitution of the state, fixes its character; that the criminal jurisprudence and civil regulations of communities, touch the welfare of individuals, at least as nearly as their fundamental laws.

The design of the Spirit of Laws is one of the most extensive ever conceived by a single individual, comprehending, in fact, every subject with which legislation is conversant, and embracing, besides constitutional and municipal law, commercial policy, public revenue, and arms. Montesquieu has been much censured for the concise and abrupt manner in which he has handled these momentous topics; and it is said that he contents himself with starting hints, and suggesting difficulties, instead of sustaining a connected investigation. But those who make this charge against the Spirit of Laws, mistake the object and scope of that performance. Where new enterprises are presented, and untried fields of exertion pointed out, such imperfect glimpses are much more effectual for quickening curiosity, and stimulating the faculties, than the fullest display. It was this author's business rather to exhibit specimens of his mode of thinking, than to pursue his ideas to their ultimate consequences; scattering the prolific germs of speculation, he left them to be brooded and matured by kindred minds. Perhaps no writer possesses, in a more eminent degree, that fertilizing influence over the understanding of his reader, which distinguishes the works of Lord Bacon. This peculiar power has been frequently noticed. "We submit," says Lord Kaimes, "implicitly to a work in which there is nothing to be corrected, and sink imperceptibly into indolence and inattention. But the detection of one error makes the reader hunt for more; and the game is pursued with vigour. In that view, I would not prefer even Aristotle before the author of L'Esprit des Loix." Voltaire observes, to the same effect, that if Montesquieu does not always enlighten his reader, he always compels him to think.

Impregnated with these vivid elements, the philosophic genius of Britain teemed during the eighteenth century with productions, the origin of which may be clearly traced to the work of Montesquieu; and if it be the achievement of a masterly genius to change the mere style or diction of his country, what must be the praise of him who impresses a new impulse on the philosophy of his age!

The grand defect of this celebrated writer unquestionably is the indiscriminate application of examples drawn from distant periods and distant stages of civilization, and the establishment of general conclusions upon too narrow a basis of induction. He glances from China to Peru, and makes but one step from Rhadamanthus to the Chancellor L'Hopital. This species of empiricism, which seizes on a naked fact in the fabled history of an imaginary nation, and grasps the slenderest analogy which can be interwoven with his theory, forms a striking contrast to the sagacity, caution, and unrivalled industry, with which he collects the most minute circumstances concurring to those political results which well attested annals supply, and is extremely singular in a writer who allows so large an influence to religion, climate, and the arts. Specious and brilliant as are these sallies, they impair the solidity of the fabric which they deck; and not only weakens our confidence in his judgment, but throw an air of suspicion over those investigations (that of the French law of succession, for example,) which the few who have taken the trouble of tracking his footsteps, have found to be scrupulously exact.

Upon a careful review of the two great writers, whom we have here attempted to delineate, and a comparison of the periods in which they lived, we shall probably be disposed, while we admit the high and peculiar claims of Montesquieu, without much hesitation, to subscribe the superiority in genius to Machiavelli. Whether we form our judgment by comparing their intellectual powers in the aggregate, or award the preference to any single quality, there seems little room for difference of opinion. The Frenchman can only claim the praise of an improver; the Italian may justly assume the dignity of an inventor. Equal to Montesquieu in acuteness and profundity, he possesses, in the vigour and originality which created a new species of philosophy, a claim to admiration, paramount to that of all his successors. Both these writers excelled in the lighter departments of literature: Montesquieu in satire; Machiavelli in comedy; but here the parallel ends; the whole compass of French letters affords no rival to that pure model of historic composition which records the revolutions of Florence. There is nothing in Davila or De Thou superior to the dissertations with which each book is introduced. We doubt whether any thing equal to them had existed previous to the days of Mr. Hume. Fame, however, has dispensed her honours to this extraordinary person with very unequal hand. Montesquieu addressed an instructed age, drew an instantaneous admiration from his contemporaries, and found the materials of his fame ready laid in every breast. Machiavelli, the light of a barbarous period, was first discovered in his true magnitude by a distant generation; when posterity recognized his eminence, his name had lost its freshness, and has come down to us sullied by the basest calumny.

REPORT

From the Committee of Superintendence for the RELIEF OF THE POOR.

The alert benevolence recently exhibited by the citizens of Philadelphia, in order if possible to extricate a large portion of the poor of their district from extraordinary suffering, occasioned by a winter of uncommon duration and intense severity, should be faithfully recorded as an example for future emulation, and as affording to the deserving unfortunate a consolatory proof that their hardships are neither unfelt for, nor forgotten. It must be borne in mind that the city and the county of Philadelphia still are, as they long have been distinguished by numbers of permanent institutions of a charitable character, separate from the pauper system established by law, whose silent and unceasing exertions might be deemed adequate, except on sudden emergencies when the causes of calamity are uncontrollable by human skill, and their effects too wide spread and rapid for ordinary precaution.

Many years have elapsed since we have been visited by a season of such extreme cold, accompanied by so many and such lingering snow storms; nor was it until late in February that the hope of a favourable change ceased, and the humane became convinced of the necessity of instantly preparing for the worst. A town meeting was called by several of our most eminent philanthropists on the twenty-first day of February, and was early crowded by those disposed to be alike generous and prompt in contributing towards its noble object. Committees were appointed to collect forthwith funds in the wards of the city, in those of the Northern Liberties, in Penn Township, and in Southwark: and a general committee of superintendence was designated, on whom devolved the duties of receiving the supplies, and of arranging a system of distribution, by which the ends of this extra charity might be quickly, prudently, and effectively attained. This latter committee, having closed their labours, now present to those whose humble and voluntary agents they were, the present general report of their proceedings.

With a view to rapidity and convenience of movement, the committee of superintendence, having first exercised the power originally vested in them of augmenting their own number, subdivided themselves into boards, a central one meeting at the Mayor's office, another at the Commissioners Hall in Southwark: each board undertaking to direct the distribution within its allotted sphere.

The reports made by some of the committees of collection very soon justified effective measures to supply the poor with the essential article of fuel. To that purpose the most vigorous and continued efforts were directed; and it is confidently believed, that notwithstanding the embarrassments and impositions incident to the haste of the emergency, an unprecedented and unexpected measure of relief has been afforded. At least four thousand of our fellow creatures have felt the beneficent effects of this public bounty, have been rescued from the wretchedness of extreme cold, or have been enabled to apply to the cravings of hunger their small earnings, which must otherwise have been ineffectually expended in struggles to preserve the warmth of life.

A slight moderation in the weather encouraged an appropriation of a portion of the funds to other modes of relief. Sums of money were placed at the disposal of each committee of collection, with authority to administer aid within their respective ranges in the form of cash, food, or clothing, as might be deemed most expedient. The reports made as to the disposition of these monies have been entirely satisfactory, and were it possible to detail them here, would in themselves amply repay the generous for all their contributions so disinterestedly advanced.—Nothing, indeed, but actual experiment could show how small a trifle will often be enough to satisfy the wants of the deserving poor, will reanimate their exhausted spirits, and kindle afresh the hope which prompts to industry and converts despair into patience.

The total amount of contributions deposited in the hands of the treasurer appointed at the town meeting for the purposes of this committee, is nine thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine dollars and twenty-six cents. And as it may be interesting to our constituents to know whence this large fund, raised in the course of a few days, has been drawn, the following statement is submitted.

Of this sum of nine thousand seven hundred and seventy-nine dollars and twenty-six cents, the principal part, to wit, $6820 43, has been expended in purchasing and delivering at the homes of the needy, in quarters or eighths, eight hundred and eighty-nine cords of wood. Obstacles and vexations of many kinds accompanied this branch of the operation: the desire to be as speedy as the occasion was peremptory, precluding an exercise of the same care and caution which in ordinary times would have been indispensable. Some unfaithful labourers, engaged in transportation, may possibly have misapplied what was confided to them: some few crafty contrivances may have filched for the uses of the unworthy undue proportions of a hoard designed for the destitute and deserving: these are the effects which the committee do not profess to have been able, under the peculiar circumstances, wholly to avoid. Had they paused to deliberate upon and perfectly to mature an unerring plan, the critical moment might have passed, calamity might have overtaken thousands, and the main object—the immediate relief—would have been defeated.

Another portion of the fund, the sum of eleven hundred and thirty three dollars, was appropriated to granting miscellaneous supplies, through the instrumentality of the committees of collection, or of particular individuals. In this course there was no danger of imposition, and every certainty of just application. Personal scrutiny was had into each case claiming attention, and the specific want promptly provided for.

Another portion of the fund, the sum of one thousand five hundred and seventy five dollars, has been divided among seven charitable institutions of our city and county, through the active agency of whose members, specially instructed by resolutions from this committee, the intentions of our constituents, were to a certain extent, best effected. These institutions are the Provident Society, the Female Hospitable Society for relieving and employing the Poor, the Female Association for the relief of reduced women and children, the Female Society for the relief and employment of the Poor, the Southern Dorcas Society, the Dorcas Society of the District of Southwark, and the Female Association for the relief of sick and infirm Poor.

A small portion of the fund, the sum of sixty dollars and eighty-three cents, has defrayed the contingent expenses necessarily attendant upon the business transacted; and the residue, to wit, one hundred and ninety dollars, has been apportioned equally for distribution to the necessitous poor in the Northern Liberties and the District of Southwark.

In fulfilling their laborious trust, the committee have benefitted by the proffered co-operation of many of their fellow citizens, whose names and services they would take pleasure in recording, were they not fearful of offending the delicacy invariably associated with pure and practical charity. An unaffected and indefatigable zeal has indeed characterized the community at large, displaying itself in every variety of action which could tend to alleviate a greater extent of misfortune and want than has heretofore been imagined to exist in our population. The keen and prolonged severity of the season aroused the anxieties and energies of benevolence; and it is believed that the good effected has exceeded all reasonable anticipation.

THOS. P. COPE, Chairman.
Philadelphia, 23d March, 1829.

At a meeting of the citizens held agreeably to public notice, on Tuesday afternoon, in the District Court Room, ALEXANDER COOK, Esq. was called to the chair, and J. R. CHANDLER, appointed secretary.

The first object of the meeting having been stated to be the consideration of means for the establishment of an asylum for the Blind, the following resolution was offered by Mathew Carey, Esq. and unanimously adopted:

Whereas, among the various benevolent societies established in this city, which reflect lustre on its character, there is none intended particularly for the blind, who are at least equally entitled to the commiseration and aid of the humane, with the deaf and the dumb, for whom a most liberal provision has been made.

And whereas, James Wills, long a resident of this city, by his last will, bequeathed a large sum, about 20,000 dollars, for the purpose of providing an asylum for the blind and the lame.

And whereas, the beneficent views of the Testator, after the lapse of above four years, are not yet carried into effect.

And whereas, it is desirable to ascertain the real state of an affair of such magnitude, and so deeply interesting to a large class of our suffering fellow beings, and, if practicable, to remove the difficulties that have for so long a period defeated the purposes of the testator.

Therefore resolved, That a committee of nine citizens be appointed to make the necessary enquiries on the subject, and ascertain whether any, and if any, what measures are proper to be pursued to secure a compliance with the view of the Testator.

The following named gentlemen were appointed a committee to carry the above resolutions into effect:

Mathew Carey, Bartholomew Wistar, Robert Earp, Isaac Lea, Robert Walsh, Jr. Dr. Caspar Wistar, Dr. J. R. Coates, Roberts Vaux, Dr. Jas. G. Nancrede.

With power to fill all the vacancies that may occur in their number, and to call a public meeting when deemed expedient.

The next object of the meeting was stated to be the formation of a society for the encouragement of Faithful Servants, on the plan pursued in New York, London, &c.

When the following resolutions offered by M. Carey, were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, societies for the encouragement of faithful domestics, established in London and New York, have powerfully tended to elevate the character, and to improve the morals of that class.

And whereas, this is an object highly interesting to heads of families, not merely in a benevolent point of view, as regards the welfare of their domestics, but in a private and personal point of view, as regards the interests and welfare of those by whom they are employed, and the morals and manners of their children, which are always in a certain degree affected by the deportment and morals of the domestics, with whom they have almost always daily, and frequently hourly, intercourse.

And whereas, there is every reason to believe that the salutary results that have been experienced in London and New York, would take place in this city by the establishment of a similar association.

Therefore, resolved, that a committee of seven citizens be appointed to take this subject into consideration—to collect and methodise all the facts and results of the experiments made in London and New York, and to make report of their proceedings to a public meeting, to be called by them as soon as they are prepared for the purpose.

Resolved, That the said Committee be requested, if they judge proper, to report a constitution of a society for encouraging faithful servants.

The following named gentlemen were appointed on the committee, authorized by the last resolution, with power too add to their number, supply vacancies, and to call a public meeting when necessary:

Matthew L. Bevan, Thos. T. Stiles, Robe[illegible]

...er of lives lost by shipwreck on that Island, in the last four months, is seventeen: 10 from brig Packet, of Providence, R. I.; 1 from brig Eliza, ... Me; and three from schooner Ranger, of Salem, Mass. This exceeds in number all that have occurred on this Island by shipwreck for the last seventeen years.

Mr. Ewer [at Providence, from Nantucket,] states, in addition to the intelligence in the paper, that a schooner, which was seen the next morning after the gale to the Northward of the Island in a wrecked condition, is supposed to have struck on Tuckernuck shoal, and to have been lost, with every soul on board, as she has not since been seen.

Left Nantucket, on Sunday morning week, for Edgartown, sloop Comet, John Colesworthy, master, since which time no intelligence has been received of the fate of the vessel or crew. Other vessels that left that place the same morning for Edgartown, succeeded in gaining that port, and have returned without giving any information of the Comet or persons who were in her, from which circumstance it is feared all are lost.

From the New Orleans Courier, March 11.

The jury in the case of Louis Gayarre brought in this morning a verdict of Manslaughter. We understand that the twelve jurors addressed however a letter to the Court, recommending from the circumstances of the case, the infliction of the highest penalty of the law. If we mistake not manslaughter is punishable by our statute by imprisonment at hard labour not exceeding twenty years, and a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars.

We are just informed that last evening towards half past ten o'clock, a young gentleman of this city was arrested, in Bourbon, between Maine and St. Ann streets, by two villains, who after robbing him of his pocket book stabbed him with a dagger, which fortunately deviated, and after having pierced his clothes, merely scratched his breast. He succeeded in forcing himself from their hands, and making his escape.

After a fresh breeze during yesterday from the N. W. accompanied by rain in the afternoon, it increased to a gale last evening, and lasted nearly all night, accompanied by thunder, lightning and hail. The packet ships De Witt Clinton and Tennessee, and the brig Castillio, were driven from their moorings, and after encountering several vessels in the stream were brought up opposite Marigny's fauxbourg, without receiving much injury. Several flat boats and other small craft were driven from their fastenings; but we have heard of no serious damage being done.

GREAT EXPLOSION.—About three weeks ago, Squire Isaac Otis, contractor on Section 66 of the Delaware canal, a little below Point Pleasant, made a blast with 4 kegs of gunpowder, about 100 lbs. blew up about 400 cubic yards of solid rock, which was estimated to weigh upwards of 600 tons. It was what was termed a sound blast, and is believed to be the greatest blast ever made in this country.

Police Office, New-York, April 1.

A Canine Constable.—On Monday night a woman who lives at the corner of Scammel and Henry streets, heard a loud cackling in her hen-roost, which she presumed arose from depredatory attempt. But there being no man in the house, she felt afraid of going down. A bull dog belonging to the house, however, took upon himself the detection of the rogue. He seized him by the calf of the leg, and held him fast, until the thief himself was forced to cry "watch." —The watch came accordingly, and found the man in the hen-house thus detained by the dog. He was walked off in custody.

A young mulatto named Edward Johnson was caught last night at a late hour, attempting to steal the stair carpet from the entry of No. 81 Dey street. He had loosened the lower part of the carpet by removing the rods. His shoes were left on the outer steps, in order that he might not disturb the family. On being examined this morning at the Police Office, a pack of cards, bearing strong marks of their having been old and faithful servants, and a book of songs and witticisms, were found upon his person. These, according to his own statement, constituted the whole of his earthly property. He was committed for trial.

SENATE OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Monday, March 30.

The clerk of the House of Representatives being introduced, presented the following extract from the journal of that house.

In the House of Representatives—Mr. Duncan announced to the House, that WILLIAM LEHMAN, late a representative from the city of Philadelphia, departed this life at 9 o'clock last night.

Whereupon the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives, deeply and sincerely regretting the death of William Lehman, long a useful, able, and distinguished member of their body, and desirous of paying a tribute of respect so justly due to his memory, will attend his funeral, at 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, from his late residence in this borough.

Resolved, That the following order of procession shall be observed at the funeral.

1. Ministers of the gospel.
2. The body of the deceased, with six pall bearers.
3. The members from the City of Philadelphia.
4. The members who boarded with the deceased.
5. The officers, speaker and members of the House of Representaives.
6. The officers, speaker and members of the Senate.
7. The governor and secretary of the commonwealth.
8. Heads of departments.
9. The Board of Canal Commissioners.
10. Citizens and strangers.

The members of both houses to proceed from their respective chambers in the above order to the funeral, and return in the same order.

The senate then adjourned.

Agreeable to the above arrangement, the funeral of the deceased was attended by the members and the citizens of Harrisburg. No business was transacted in either house.

PERSONAL APPEARANCE OF THE TURKS.

Taken enmasse, the Turks are the finest looking race of men in the world; their oval heads, arching brows, jetty eyes, and aquiline noses, their lofty figures and stately mien are all set off to full advantage by their ample robes and graceful turbans; all is ease and proportion about a Turk; there are no angles or straight lines in his features or person; in all we find the pure curve of manly beauty and majestic grace. It is inconceivable what a miserable figure an Englishman or a European makes beside him; his black unmeaning hat, harlequin pantaloons, and hard collared, straight cut-coat, (which will one day puzzle those of posterity who shall be antiquaries in costume,) contrast so villainously with the picturesque head dress, ample trowsers and floating pelisse of the Ottoman, whilst his glossy beard flings contempt on the effeminate chin of the clipped and docked European. His arms, for "in the East all arm," usually consist of a pair of superbly chased pistols, stuck in a silken sash; a yataghan, with a jewelled handle; a large and more clumsy knife, called a baniar, and the scymetar swinging in a scabbard, covered with green or crimson velvet, (as the owner being an Emir or other wise, entitled to cary it,)and ornamented with bosses of gold. The latter is, in general, the most important and valuable portion of his arms, or even of his property. I have seen some blades which were valued at 200 or 300 dollars. —Letters from the Ægean.

LOSS OF SHEEP.

It is the opinion of many that the severity of the past winter, together with the late furious storm, has caused the death of one fourth part of all the sheep owned upon this Island. How near accurate this estimate may prove, no one perhaps can immediately ascertain; but when it is taken into consideration that a great portion of these suffering animals could but barely live before the severe storm of Sunday last, those that perished during and since that tempest, will probably exceed in number all that had died in the course of the winter; inasmuch as that storm was much more severe than any that had preceded it, and the sheep, from their feeble condition, less able to survive it. We have been informed, by a gentleman of strict veracity, and who was an eye-witness to the distressing spectacle, that many of the sheep were driven by the tremendous force of the storm to the southern part of the island, and there remained buried in the snow, many of them with their heads out, and the crows actually pecking their eyes out before they were dead! If the tender feelings of humanity should ever be called forth to commiserate the sufferings of inferior animals, the poor sheep of Nantucket are entitled to a liberal share.

DIED.

Yesterday, at 1 o'clock, P. M. PATRICK BRADY, in the 34th year of his age. His friends and those of his brother Thomas are invited to attend his funeral, this afternoon, at 4 o'clock, from the residence of James Thomas, in Fourth street below Shippen, without further notice.

At her residence in Chippawa Township, Beaver county, Penn on the 29th ult. Mrs. TERRISSA OSMON, wife of Capt. William B. Osmon, formerly of this city, in the 43d year of her age. In the death of this amiable woman, a husband and a large family of children have sustained an irreparable loss, and society a valuable member. Mrs. Osman was a member of the first Baptist Church in this city for several years. She was a humble and pious christian, an affectionate wife, and a tender mother. She bore her afflictions with meekness and submission.—In her extremities, she was frequently heard to exclaim, "Oh! my God, not my will but thine be done."—She had a humble and confidential reliance on the merits of her Redeemer, for she tasted of the word of God. The sting and terror of Death were extracted from her soul through the influence of grace, and she was enabled to sing the triumphant song, "Oh! death where is thy sting, Oh! grave where is thy victory."—Her happy soul has taken its flight from this world, where sin and sorrow grows, and has entered the perly gates of the New Jerusalem, where no chilling wind or poisonous breath can reach, and where sickness and sorrow, pain and death, are felt no more.

Patents and Patentees.

HAVING formerly been employed by the United States, in the department for patenting useful inventions, and having since that period prepared, during many years, all papers pointed out by law for obtaining patents, without one solitary instance ever occurring of having a petition, drawing, or specification ever rejected at the Patent Office. I now respectfully make known to all persons concerned, that much time, great and unnecessary trouble, tedious delays, labour and money, expended in long journeys to Washington, may be saved to them, if their papers shall previously be properly and methodically arranged, and their drawings distinctly and specifically defined.

It is not sufficient that the instrument should be written in good language, but the whole ought to be embodied by a person skilfully familiar in mechanics and art, corresponding with scientific lore in the words and tenor describing the object, because it forms an essential part of the document, consequently its validity, in almost every judicial discussion, would be determined upon the averments laid down in the specification. Therefore, without the most particular attention to full, clear, and explicit elucidations, every patent must be held upon very frail security, and many have been pronounced null and void by judicial investigation, owing to some defect in the body of the description, notwithstanding elaborate pains had been taken to multiply vague and unmeaning law phrases to no purpose, clearly evincing gross deficiency in the practical knowledge so indispensable to accurate and manifest demonstrations of the mechanic powers when applied to machinery.

Letters, if post paid, will be promptly answered, and all requisite papers, drawings, &c. furnished, and patents obtained and forwarded to any part of the United States at much less cost than can possibly be done by individuals unacquainted with the business. Apply to JAMES AKIN.

A LARGE assortment of CORN AND GRASS SCYTHES, of American Manufacture, for sale by G. M. & G. R. JUSTICE, jan. 21—dtf No. 149 Market street.

MR. BRISTOW'S

New System of Writing,

PATRONIZED by the principle Nobility and Gentry in London; also sanctioned by the approbation of the Universities and all the public Institutions.

Mr. Bristow, (late Master of the Athenæan Academy, Regent street, London,) considering that too many attempts could not be made to perfect a system of so much importance to all classes of society, whether in promoting the valuable interests of mutual intercourse, or the more important affairs of the Counting-house, and Merchants' Ledger, has been indefatigable in his endeavours to effect so desirable an object; and, from the unparalleled success and distinguished patronage which have hitherto attended the adoption of his recent improvement, is enabled confidently to assure those ladies and gentlemen who wish to obtain a free, elegant and extremely rapid style of Penmanship, in every respect suited to the various purposes of life and business, to embrace the present opportunity—that however defective may be the original writing, they may now obtain this most useful and necessary accomplishment; not only obtain it, but made good writers in the course of eight short and easy lessons—as, Mr. B. positively engages to do so. They are also instructed to acquire good figures; to mend and make their own pens, and to write perfectly straight, without the use of lines. This system is particularly recommended, as it is calculated to save the expense both of time and money: yet time and their own discernment will decide upon its intrinsic worth.

Mr. B's classes continue through the day, and are limited to four only, for the surer advancement of his pupils, that being his whole thought. Ladies and gentlemen are at liberty to form their own classes, either at his establishment, or at their own residence. Also, Mr. B. particularly wishes it to be understood, that in all his extensive practice he has never failed in producing a good writer in eight lessons, as the specimens from the ages of 12 to 60 will fully exemplify; and may be seen on application at the establishment, or in Chesnut street, 2 doors below Fourth—but the pupil, not only being made perfectly satisfied in the specified time, they do, and will find a succession of improvement for ever afterwards.

No. 82, S. W. corner of Arch & Fourth sts.

Mr. Bristow begs leave to return his most grateful acknowledgments to his friends and the public in general, for the very flattering and liberal encouragement he has hitherto received.

N. B. The evening classes commence from the hours of six till nine. march 27—tf

PIANO FORTE MANUFACTORY.

THE opportunity afforded by the winter months has enabled the advertiser to replenish his Ware Room, anticipating as usual at the opening season, an influx of demand for the article in which he is happy to say his success in the proximity to perfection has exceeded his most sanguine expectation.

The ready sale of these improved Piano Fortes is and has been a most satisfactory test of this fact, and it is a matter of no small moment to offer again his unfeigned thanks, for the almost unparalleled encouragement with which he has been met, by his friends of the Country as well as the City.

In thus tendering his grateful regards to his fellow citizens and patrons generally, he avails himself of the opportunity of offering an entire new assortment of the best production from his Manufactory, which certainly will need no verbal recommendation from himself, assured as he is that his instruments can speak purely and firmly for themselves.

The expenses of this establishment being perhaps less than any other in the city, he feels encouraged to say that Country merchants who may be venders or have orders, will further their interest in the two fold view of judicious and pecuniary advantage in giving him a call.

Piano Fortes repaired neatly and promptly. Old ones taken in part pay for new. E. N. SCHERR,
